Dior Cotten is a strategic consultant with Louisville-based health care organization Humana. As a member of the Healthcare Quality Reporting and Information organization, her work focuses on collaborating with the physician provider community to ensure the highest standard of care and quality for Humana members.

For more than three years, Cotten has been certified by the Project Management Institute as a Project Management Professional and is a member of the local Kentuckiana chapter. She is also an active member of the Young Professionals Association of Louisville. Her most recent accomplishment with this organization was completion of the Spring 2016 Emerging Leaders Program, which resulted in a detailed survey on what makes Louisville a great place to live, work and play for its young professionals, and how the city can improve.

Cotten is a graduate of the Fund for the Arts' nationally recognized leadership development program, NeXt! and served as the education chair for the class of 2015. She is currently serving on the Greater Louisville Master Plan for the Arts steering committee.

With a passion for the performing arts, Cotten has a strong commitment to philanthropy, especially for young professionals to invest in their cultural and social landscape. She is a member of the Louisville Ballet's young professional arts group, the Relevé Society, as well as the Fund for the Arts Farnsley by 40 Society, whose members commit to contributing at Founders Society level by the time they turn 40.

Cotten is originally from the Los Angeles area, but has lived in Louisville for some time and considers it her adopted hometown. The oldest of her two daughters attends Jefferson County Public Schools' Noe Middle School, benefiting from a full catalog of visual and performing arts courses.
